

The Integrated Evaluation Architecture

The Integrated Evaluation Architecture sits alongside the Integrated Response Framework and provides a way of understanding whether change is occurring at multiple levels — for individuals and whānau, in practitioner and service responses, through cross-sector collaboration, and ultimately at system and population level. Rather than relying on a single measure of success, it connects evidence across these levels to understand both outcomes and how change occurs.

Te Ako Manaaki: The Architecture of Evidence-Based System Learning

